What Is Asthma?

Asthma is a disease that affects your lungs. It is one of the most common long-term diseases of children, but adults have asthma, too. Asthma causes repeated episodes of wheezing, breathlessness, chest tightness, and nighttime or early morning coughing. If you have asthma, you have it all the time, but you will have asthma attacks only when something bothers your lungs.

In most cases, we don't know what causes asthma, and we don't know how to cure it. We know that if someone in your family has asthma, you are also more likely to have it.

You can control your asthma by knowing the warning signs of an attack, staying away from things that trigger an attack, and following the advice of your doctor or other medical professional. When you control your asthma:

- you won't have symptoms such as wheezing or coughing,
- you'll sleep better,
- you won't miss work or school,
- you can take part in all physical activities, and
- you won't have to go to the hospital.

Asthma can be hard to diagnose, especially in children younger than 5 years of age. Regular physical checkups that include checking your lung function and checking for allergies can help your doctor or other medical professional make the right diagnosis.

During a checkup, the doctor or other medical professional will ask you questions about whether you cough a lot, especially at night, and whether your breathing problems are worse after physical activity or during a particular time of year. Doctors will also ask about other symptoms, such as chest tightness, wheezing, and colds that last more than 10 days. They will ask you whether your family members have or have had asthma, allergies, or other breathing problems, and they will ask you questions about your home. The doctor will also ask you about missing school or work and about any trouble you may have doing certain activities.

A lung function test, called spirometry (spy-rom-e-tree), is another way to diagnose asthma. A spirometer (spy-rom-e-ter) measures the largest amount of air you can exhale, or breathe out, after taking a very deep breath. The spirometer can measure airflow before and after you use asthma medicine.

An asthma attack can occur when you are exposed to things in the environment, such as house dust mites and tobacco smoke. These are called asthma triggers.

This information was provided by the Center for Disease Control and Prevention.

For more information on asthma contact a physician or go to www.cdc.gov/asthma/faqs.htm

Social Security to Fast-Track Disability Decisions on 52 New Medical Conditions

The Social Security Administration (SSA) has added 52 new Compassionate Allowances (CA) conditions mainly involving neurological disorders, cancers and rare diseases. The CA program speeds up disability decisions to make sure that Americans with the most serious disabilities receive their benefit decisions within days instead of months or years. SSA is also improving its online disability application process. If you've already filed an application and it was denied, you can file an appeal.

You've Got a Friend

Friends Like You. Friends Like Me. is an educational community outreach initiative of Children's Specialized Hospital, designed to help educate children about autism spectrum disorder and provide the tools necessary to facilitate friendships among children. This program encourages recognition of children's similarities, reinforces the common desire to be accepted and have friends, demystifies autism in an age-appropriate manner, and promotes inclusion, respect, and friendship between children of all abilities in all facets of their lives. Use the program's materials and resources to encourage understanding and acceptance and to reduce intimidation and bullying.

Educational Film:

The program's enlightening video explains ways to educate children about autism spectrum disorder. It offers strategies and resources to encourage interactions and friendships in school environments as well as in the general community. School administrators, students, and professionals share ideas and strategies to facilitate positive peer relationships and friendship development.

Friendship Booklet:

The challenges and behaviors related to autism spectrum disorder are difficult for many people to understand. For children and teens, it can be even more difficult. Children with ASD do not naturally learn how to interpret social action, pretend play, or play with peers. These skills need to be directly taught. As a result, it is often difficult for these children to join their peers in shared leisure activities. Typically developing peers often are unsure of why kids with ASD act differently, which may result in rejection and isolation. The program's booklet educates and helps to reduce fear and uncertainty. It provides children and teens with ways to include children with ASD.

Supplemental Materials:

The program has a list of children's books to help them learn more about ASD and friendship. Adults can benefit from a list of videos, articles and websites to help facilitate friendships among children. There is also a list of practical tips to encourage positive social interactions in school settings, recreational programs, with sports teams, or any groups involving children or teens. Choose from many activities including ideas for child/teen discussion, research topics, and public service projects to support increased understanding and acceptance.

For information on this program go to http://www.childrens-specialized.org/Programs-Services/Outpatient-Programs/Autism-Program/Education-and-Outreach/Friends-Like-You--Friends-Like-Me-.aspx or Google “Friends Like You, Friends Like Me”.

This program has been made possible by the Kohl’s KidsAbilities Program at Children’s Specialized Hospital through the generosity of Kohl's Cares.

Autism Insurance Mandate Bill

The Department of Managed Health Care (DMHC) has established a new contact site to better assist in the implementation of the autism insurance mandate bill (SB 946). Questions about specific cases, issues, or problems related to SB 946 can be emailed to: SB946Questions@dmhc.ca.gov. This site is strictly focused on addressing case-specific inquiries. Policy related issues, such as the work of the DMHC Autism Taskforce, are NOT within the scope of this site. Information on the Taskforce are available at: http://www.dmhc.ca.gov/dmhc_consumer/br/br_autismtf.aspx
In partnership with the Department of Education, the new www.StopBullying.gov site emphasizes action steps individuals can take to prevent and stop bullying in their schools and communities. It also features easy-to-use tools and resources for community leaders, young people and families, including:

- How to recognize the warning signs and when to take action
- Tips to prevent bullying before it starts
- How to implement strategies for intervention
- Ways to share your community’s resources, policies or strategies to prevent and address bullying
- Information on bullying laws in your state

The new site offers ways to share ideas and start discussions about different roles the community can plan in bullying prevention. Supporters are being asked to spread the word through new widgets and badges and to subscribe to email updates to find out about new content on the site. The public can also submit materials for inclusion in the resource database. StopBullying.gov can be followed on Twitter or Facebook for more information on how to take action.

Moving?
If you are relocating within FRN’s five county service area (Amador, Calaveras, San Joaquin, Stanislaus and Tuolumne counties) we want to continue to send you the FRN newsletter. Because the newsletter is mailed via bulk mail it is not automatically forwarded to your new location. Only First Class mail is forwarded. FRN sometimes receives notification from the postal service that a family has moved, but that notification usually takes months and we don’t always receive a new mailing address. So if you want to make sure that you receive all issues of the newsletter just give FRN a call or send an email or letter with your new address.

Best wishes to you in your new home!

There’s An App For That!
FRN is compiling information on smart phone or iPad apps that are recommended by parents or professionals. Send the name of the app and a short description to FRNfamilies@aol.com.
